RVs an alu frame and a gas tank, theres fuck all potential there that would take out half a building. And adding in a single propane tank (or two) still would not cause that force/level of destruction.
tldr. thats a bomb, and youse non-habbening fags are all retarted.

oh yeah that's a fucking bomb.

i witnessed an 'organic' RV explosion. gas leak and lit cigarette, some dumb drunk boomer got his windows blown out. also got stormed by a pissed off swat team ready to mag dump him. they investigated, let the dude out after a few days, and basically told him to get fucked and tow his shitty RV.

thing was small even though a whole propane tank went boom, i was in a house next to the RV park and it only cracked a window, and that was probably from a rock or some shit that was ejected.

IRA would generally call in a warning, so the area got cleared before the bomb went off. The prime aim was disruption as you note, actual body counts were considered bad PR. Occasionally, of course, this would go wrong, and people would get their wires crossed, as in the Birmingham pub bombings where a botched warning ended with 21 dead.

Yes we have reason to believe the bomb was planted by agents from the Iranian ministry of intelligence. Apparently, one of the tenants in the street was shitposting about the HESA Kowsar fighter jet and claimed it was based on the American f-5, insulting an entire nation in the process. The intelligence gathered by shaking down niqabs outside the Nashville mosque revealed a large network of highly organized Iranians that remained under the radar due to their ability to camouflage as part of the niqab-wearing minority in Iran, providing the network with the perfect cover, literally.

Everybody in here is actually retarded. RVs have propane tanks more often than not and people are lazy as fuck and don't take care of them. Tank probly burst and exploded and nothing more. Why would someone plant a bomb in an RV and then blow nothing up with it? That's like a "happening" being a gas can in my backyard falling into a campfire.

Pic was actually Manchester, 1996.

They took out half the city centre, but a warning 90 mins before = area evacuated, zero casualties. The Birmingham pub bombings were a bit of a disaster from start to finish, the former IRA are still arguing over who was responsible. These were much, much smaller bombs than Manchester, but they fucked up the warnings and 21 died. These were all (or near all) civilian 'soft targets', the murder of whom generally does not win friends to the cause.

Not really. The tanks on RVs are usually big. The only real damage I see in these pics is a bunch of debris around, not seeing a lot of building damage or anything. Probably just the RV blew and pieces of it and nearby stuff are on fire around. All this said, I would love for someone to actually be doing something for once. But that's extremely unlikely.

You guys are literally listening to some news guy on Twitter. Since when does the news do anything anymore except sensationalize everything? Fucking firework could blow up on the 4th of July and the news would call it a possible chemical artillery attack to get clicks.

That's exactly my point, no one actually got hurt. If it was a real attack people would've been killed, but this seems like it was intentionally placed to not hurt anyone but still create a scenario where political action could take place.

I'm still not convinced this wasn't a meth lab or something of that nature blowing up. And regarding Iran the "president/p-elect", they don't have to be actively talking about them. Our foreign policy isn't even completely in their control anymore. Our intervention in the ME is influenced by the Israeli lobby who has tremendous influence over our executive branch. You should know this and it isn't even CT or debatable. There's plenty of documentation about this. Now that I think about it more Iran WAS recently discussed. I guess since most Americans have the memory of a fruit fly "recent" to them means "did it happen this week?". Tensions with Iran have been ongoing this year and we even assassinated their head state nuclear weapons program scientist.

I've seen a dozen carbombs. this is actually small, even for the effects of a tight road with high buildings. Couple hundred pounds of equivalent max. Either only a portion of it went off, which means the feds are going to have a field day, or it was some seriously homegrown subtier exploded bits.

I for one am glad the feds have a shitty christmas. But I do home all the good average citizens are safe and sound and nobody was hurt. Sucks they get the shit scared out of them, even small bombs are impressive IRL.

>radiation detectors on site
>no sign of extra shrapnel built into the device

If its a dirty bomb, an rv would be the appropriate delivery vehicle as a dirty bomb requires a ridiculous amount of space compared to the bomb's energy. So far it looks like a classical dirty bomb attack. Explosion only servers to spread the radioactive material, which will have spread far with the blast wave. Several blocks at a minimum.

If there really is Caesium-137 spreading from ground zero, hundreds if not thousands will die by February first. That shit will kill you, slowly and painfully.
